Crossing the Golden Gate Bridge, heading North, visit the spectacular Giant Redwood Trees at Sequoia

Sequoia National Park California is an unspoiled treasure of some of the most striking scenery in the world. From its towering giant sequoia trees and soaring mountain peaks to cascading creeks, flowering meadows, and star-studded evening skies, you'll be inspired by nature's masterpiece.

Established in 1890, Sequoia National Park is California's first national park and America's second oldest. With more than 1 million annual visitors, Sequoia National Park is a popular destination for guests from around the world.

Enjoy lunch on location

Golden Gate Park is our next stop

Larger than New York's Central Park, and once consisted of sand dunes, Golden Gate Park is now covered with more than one million trees and is bison-friendly. The ultimate haven away from urban chaos -- was deeded to the people in 1870 out of the prescient notion that San Franciscans would one day feel overcrowded. This foresight proved invaluable, as 75,000 people now visit the park on an average weekend
